This change, therefore, creates a great deal of uncertainty as SEWRC now has the right to amend the FiT at any time it decides that there is a more than 10% change in the investment cost for certain types of technology (for example, a decrease in the market prices of PV panels would trigger a re-evaluation of the FiT for PV power plants).

The chart below shows Bulgaria's current electricity mix.¹² As can be seen above, coal and nuclear power dominate Bulgaria's power mix. Moreover, the latest version of Bulgaria's National Climate and Energy Plan (NCEP) continues to envision a prominent role for both nuclear power and fossil gas in the country, despite the fact that these
